ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I would like to express my sincere thanks and appreciation to the well-known theatrical author, scriptwriter, and film director Giorgos Th. Tzavellas, (1916-76) for his kindness in providing me with his personal material regarding Greek cinema.

I am also grateful to Vasilis Georgiadis (1921-2000) for his contribution of considerable data with reference to my work. Vasilis Georgiadis was an editor and publisher of Greek Motion Pictures Almanac. In addition, he was a motion picture and television director of note; the contributions from such a very busy man are doubly appreciated.

For his interest and help with material for my work I would also like to thank the well-known author, scriptwriter and film director, Nestor P. Matsas.

Also, I would like to thank the historian of Greek Cinema and film director Yannis Soldatos and the editor and publisher of the Greek Motion Pictures Magazine Theamata (The Shows), Aeolos Varelas and the producers Panayiotis and Christos Kiriakopoulos, and the Giorgos E. Pashalidis.

Finally, I am indebted to the author Lewis Girion, and Panagiotis (Takis) Demopoulos of Los Angeles, California, for their kindness and their patient instruction in reading the manuscript of my work and correcting some errors. I also want to thank all the directors who responded to my requests for information.

FOREWORD

This work surveys the general view of the cinema in Greece over the 100 years from 1900 to 2000. It considers not only the films themselves, but their financial, technical and political background from the period of their introduction in Greece to their eventual development. This work also is an attempt to depict what has been done with motion picture production during the 20th century in chronological order. While there is a rather meager supply of sources in United States, we are fortunate enough to discover and use some important Greek texts and sources of information.

The story of Greek cinema is not any different than that of any other small European country. The predominance of the foreign films in Greece over the domestic motion picture industry subjected the latter to many vicissitudes, the chief of which was the raising of capital. However, we shall see how the movies were produced, what kind of films they were, and from whence the producers, directors and script-writers mostly drew their subjects. We shall examine what their circumstances were and consider their main difficulties, such as capital, experience and technical facilities; and, finally, examine certain other forms of entertainment which Greek cinema had to compete with.

We have endeavored to be accurate throughout. It became necessary to examine the history of Greek cinema, and in parallel the influence on it by its European and American counterpart. We found it expedient to divide our work into six sections, as follows: Motion Pictures Arrived in Greece; The Silent Greek Movies; The Period of Talking Movies Begins; The Decade of 1951-1960; The Decade of 1961-1970; the last five years of 1971-1975, and the 1976-2000 period. Under those sections we shall discuss a few details of other forms of entertainment. Mainly, how the first foreign films were received, and, in some detail, the domestic (Greek) productions on the more successful films. In that way, we hope that the reader will have a clear picture of Greek movies and their plots to form his own judgment. Finally, we have examined the effect of government regulations and censorship on both domestic and foreign films.

In this work, we have tried, to the best of our knowledge, to research the scattered articles about Greek cinema, and put them in chronological order so that later historians may be able to do better.

Trifon Tzavalas

The only son of Panayiotis and Sophia Tzavalas, Trifon was born in Athens in 1935. After graduating from the 8th Gymnasium for Boys, he enlisted in the Greek Air Force for his military service. Once out of the service, he worked next to the great film directors Giorgos Tzavelas and Vassilis Georgiadis who produced some of the classic films during the golden age of Greek cinema in the 50's and 60's.

Then Trifon decided he needed more film training and went to Germany, then to Montreal, and finally to Hollywood where his father's brother, William Chavalas, was the artistic director at 20th Century Fox designing film sets and movie theaters. W. Chavalas designed and decorated some of the finest movie theaters built in Los Angeles in the 1940's and 1950's. One of his monumental works is the Byzantine art of the church of Saint Sophia Greek Orthodox Cathedral in Los Angeles. Unfortunately, just before Trifon arrived in Los Angeles, his uncle suddenly died. In those early days, Trifon struggled to make a living while studying film direction at Columbia College. As a thesis project, he researched and wrote "The History of Greek Cinema". That thesis germinated into the 6-volume encyclopedic work, The History of Greek Cinema, which is now in this website. It took him practically the rest of his life to assemble the information for this publication. In the meantime, for relaxation, he wrote poems (a selection is included here). He and his wife Maureen raised one son, Panayiotis, and dote on their three grandchildren: Sophia and the twins Triphon and Talia.

Due to his untimely illness, which to a great extent paralyzed Trifon in 2008, his friend Takis Demopoulos undertook the effort to edit and complete the publication. Zafiris Gourgouliatos assisted with the publication and web presentation. This electronic version of the book is published by the Hellenic University Club of Southern California, a Non-Profit Cultural Organization.

Advance Praise for
THE HISTORY OF GREEK CINEMA

“In this monumental work, Trifon Tzavalas lists each and every movie created from the beginning of Greek Cinema to the year 2000. This encyclopedia will help movie creators and historians in the 21st century and beyond.” — Zafiris Gourgouliatos, President of the Hellenic University Club of Southern California.
